

By now you should have met or seen, Dr Premendra of Sacred Citadel in Bangsar. He has graced the pages of The New Strait Times, The Star, Expat KL and In Bangsar, and is now involved with MANZA doing his bit to help out at the Charity Auction and Dinner this month.

I went down to his store to visit and discovered that almost everything in the store has a story behind it. When you purchase something from Sacred Citadel, not only will it be of exquisite quality, but it will be a piece of Tibet's colourful history.

Sacred Citadel is working with a handful of trained Tibetans who are spread over the Himalayas. While preserving its religious applications, Sacred Citadel places order with these settlements to make appliqué items for less spiritual purposes. Bed Covers, Cushion Covers, Wall Hangings, Curtains and other Fashion Accessories made of different kinds of silk are objects which convey a little of the grandeur that has survived the turmoil of the centuries.

There are so many patterns to choose from that one can also place an order according to his/her requirements. Besides the soft furnishings one can also have a warmth and soft feel of the beautiful Tibetan rugs/carpets, which are hand woven by the Tibetans by using the Merino wool yarn from New Zealand. There is a wide choice available at Sacred Citadel and then you again place an order according to the colour and size specifications.

Please come down and see for yourself and enjoy a generous 20% discount for MANZA members.
